

LINTO your kitchen — just as you are drying the last dish from breakfast—pours the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. Violins and 'cellos, clarinets and oboes, the whole blooming orchestra, as you might say, right there in your kitchen. Each player so clear and individual and yet only a strand in the whole tapestry of music. Such a glory of sound. . .

You don't like Symphony Concerts for breakfast? Then turn the tuning knob, dear lady. It's your kitchen. Choose your own guests.

It's a job to know who's putting most into it — the jockey coming up the straight or young Len in the bar at the local. But there's no doubt where the greatest strain is. That blessed chair is going to give way any minute! Len would hardly notice if it did. He's got other things on his mind.

He may be losing his shirt on the race but he's certainly getting his money's worth in excitement.
